

Christopher Scott, Infinity Performance Solutions President, has more than twenty years of experience as a strategy and performance management consultant with midsized to Fortune 500 companies, including Vivendi Universal and Johnson and Johnson.

As a Consulting Director for Johnson and Johnson, Chris helped build an internal consulting practice that provided strategic planning, business improvement, change management, and M&A integration solutions to the various operating companies of J&J. During his time at J&J, he led and supported numerous large-scale strategic initiatives in the areas of organizational realignment, business process optimization, and change management.

While serving as a Director of Organizational Development with Vivendi Universal, he helped propel new revenue growth by designing, implementing and managing the corporate strategic planning process.

Recent projects include:

- Helped a healthcare company implement a new enterprise information management system by integrating a change management process in to the overall project management approach.
- Partnered with a $3.5 billion consumer healthcare company to create business strategies to achieve growth and to align organizational culture, process and people to the strategies.
- Designed and implemented a change management capability building initiative for a Global Medical Device Company. Process was implemented across 17 world wide manufacturing sites.
- Restructured the “cradle to grave” operation processes for an Environmental Services business unit.
- Created a leadership development program that enabled a pharmaceutical company to shift its culture from an internal focus to a customer focus while building the leadership capability of its high-potential employees.

Chris holds a Masters Degree in Industrial and Organizational Psychology from Hofstra University, a BA in Business Management from Towson University, and is a certified Six Sigma Greenbelt.
